Making the Most of Baby Behavior: An Advanced Practice

CATHERINE WATSON GENNA

Sabato 2 luglio 2016 10:00 am 18:00 pm

Synthesizing Sucking Research

Ultrasound allows us to look into the infant's mouth during breastfeeding. This talk traces recent studies on how infants suck to build a picture of normal breastfeeding and how tongue-tie affects the baby's sucking skills.

Disorganized sucking and fussiness (colic) in a subset of rapidly growing breastfed infants

Some infants with tongue-tie are able to get plenty of milk, but unable to control milk flow and cry frequently. This case series traces ways to study the coordination of sucking, swallowing and breathing in infants and shares the results of applying cervical auscultation to tongue tied babies with colic.

Is it the Tongue or the Breast? Tracing the Etiology of Breastfeeding Difficulties

Maternal and infant causes for low milk production or inefficient breastfeeding are reviewed to allow a better differential diagnosis.

Fingerfeeding as Oral Motor Therapy

Nuances of using fingerfeeding to help babies with sucking problems to improve their strength, muscle tone, and organization.

How Babies Use their Hands During Latch

Babies are trying to help themselves when they use their hands at the breast. This talk shows what they are trying to achieve and how to avoid interfering, as well as helping mother to understand what baby is doing. 1 hour
